HealthMap Vaccine Finder: Helping Adults Find the Vaccines They Need

By Dr. Howard K. Kohn, Assistant Secretary for Health
Published February 16, 2013

When we talk about vaccines, most people think of "flu" or "childhood immunizations." But there are actually a number of vaccines available to protect adults from serious infectious diseases and their long-term consequences. Adult vaccines can prevent diseases such as shingles, pneumonias and whooping cough. The HPV vaccine can prevent cervical cancer. And the hepatitis B vaccine also prevents the liver cancer that can develop as a result of chronic hepatitis B infection. In the past many Americans faced financial barriers to immunization, but thanks to the Affordable Care Act, millions of Americans now have access to the vaccine recommended by the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practice without co-payments or other cost-sharing requirements when these services are delivered by an in-network provider.

Despite the numerous benefits of vaccination, too many adults are not getting the protection that they need. So...
