

Trini Mathew MD, MPH, FACP
Assistant Professor and Hospital Epidemiologist
University of Connecticut Medical Center

Dr. Mathew is originally from India and has spent some childhood years in Nigeria. She received her medical degree with honors from Tver State Medical Academy, Tver, Russia in 1997. She subsequently completed her residency training in Internal Medicine at Jacobi Medical Center, affiliated with Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Bronx, NY from 1999-2002. From 2002- 2003 she served as chief resident, Department of Internal Medicine, at Jacobi Medical Center. She completed her fellowship in Infectious Diseases from Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center (BIDMC), Boston in 2006. She also was a research fellow at the Division of Social Medicine and Health Inequalities, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston 2004 -2006 and later was Instructor, Harvard Medical School until 2007. Dr. Mathew received her Master's in Public Health from Harvard School of Public Health, Boston with a concentration in Clinical Effectiveness in 2006. Dr. Mathew has worked with Partners In Health in addressing alcohol use disorders in tuberculosis (TB) patients in Tomsk Oblast TB Services, Western Siberia, Russia. She has also developed training material for both TB and HIV providers in Russia to address alcohol and substance use disorders. She has also served as State Consultant to Mississippi State TB program, as Assistant Professor of Infectious Diseases, University of MS Medical Center.

In her role at the University of Connecticut Medical Center, Dr. Mathew provides clinical care for patients with HIV and other immunosuppressive conditions. She also sees patients in the International Travel clinic and provides counseling on travel specific immunizations and routine immunizations.

Since 2012, Dr. Mathew has worked with the Public Health Committee of Infectious Diseases Society of America on standards adult immunization practices and lifespan registries.