

Vivian Huang, MD, MPH
Director, Adult Immunization and Emergency Preparedness
Medical Director, NYC Department of Health Immunization Clinic
New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene

Dr. Huang is committed to reducing the burden of vaccine-preventable diseases locally, nationally and globally. She sees herself as a clinician-public health professional who is an avid “disease detective” and “prevention warrior.” She is a dual board-certified Internal Medicine and Preventive Medicine physician.

Prior to joining the New York City Health Department, Dr. Huang completed medical missions in Syria and Swaziland with Doctors without Borders. During the world’s worst Ebola epidemic in 2015, she worked with Partners in Health in Sierra Leone.

From 2013 - 2015, she served as the Hepatitis B Director at the Charles B. Wang Community Health Center in New York City. She is a board member of the Chinese American Medical Society, steering committee member of the National Viral Hepatitis Roundtable and regional representative for Doctors without Borders volunteers that return to New York City.

Dr. Huang completed internal medicine residency at Long Island Jewish Medical Center. She earned her MPH from Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health and completed her second residency in public health/preventive medicine at the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.

Dr. Huang’s interests include global health and health inequities affecting the Asian American population. She is a strong believer in prevention and knows first-hand that immunization is the main crux of prevention and good health. A healthy person is the cornerstone to a healthy world.

She has a love for animals and mother Earth. In her leisure time, she enjoys running, biking, climbing, yoga and meditation.
