

Andrew Leidner PhD
Immunization Services Division
National Center for Immunization and Respiratory Diseases
Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

Mr. Leidner first started working at CDC by joining the Prevention Effectiveness Fellowship program. Since completing the fellowship in 2014, he has worked as a contractor in the Immunization Services Division, conducting research and providing subject matter expertise related to the economics of vaccines and vaccine-preventable-diseases.

Mr. Leidner is originally from Tifton, Georgia. In 2007, he graduated from the University of Georgia with degrees in English literature and economics. In 2012, he completed a PhD at the Department of Agricultural Economics at Texas A&M University.