

Robert Hopkins, Jr., MD, MACP

Chief of the Division of General Internal Medicine and Associate Program Director for the Med-Peds residency University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences

Robert Hopkins is professor of Internal Medicine and Pediatrics and serves as the Chief of the Division of General Internal Medicine and as an Associate Program Director for the Med-Peds residency at the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences. External to UAMS, he has held a number of national and local leadership positions and is the current Chair of the National Vaccine Advisory Committee to the US Department of Health and Human Services. Dr. Hopkins' primary academic interest is clinical vaccinology with emphasis on education and quality improvement. Dr. Hopkins maintains board certification in Internal Medicine and in Pediatrics. He continues an active teaching and clinical practice providing primary and consultative care to adults and children.