

Robert Hopkins, Jr., MD, MACP
Professor of Internal Medicine and Pediatrics
Division of General Internal Medicine
University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences;
Medical Director
National Foundation for Infectious Diseases

Robert Hopkins, Jr., MD, MACP is Professor of Internal Medicine and Pediatrics in the Division of General Internal Medicine at the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences and Medical Director for the National Foundation for Infectious Diseases. He is a long-term supporter of the National Adult and Influenza Summit going back to its founding as the National Influenza Summit. He is immediate-past Chair of the National Vaccine Advisory Committee to the US Department of Health and Human Services and is current chair of the American College of Physicians Immunization Committee. Dr. Hopkins' primary academic focus is clinical vaccinology. Dr. Hopkins maintains an active teaching and clinical practice providing primary and consultative care to adults and children.