

Sheila Reynoso, MPH

Manager - Immunization, Infectious Disease, and Public Health Preparedness American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists

Sheila's journey from the Dominican Republic to Paterson, NJ, shaped her lifelong commitment to health equity. Throughout her career, she has specialized in building linkage to care for the most vulnerable populations, including those managing chronic conditions and navigating the complexities of the justice system. Today, she brings that expertise to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), overseeing the Immunization and Infectious Disease program and supporting vital public health preparedness initiatives. A graduate of Hunter College with an MPH in Community Health Education, Sheila is driven by a mission to eliminate health disparities and achieve true equity — with the ultimate goal of one day "working herself out of a job" by solving the systemic challenges she fights today. When off the clock, she finds inspiration in her books, her growing plant collection, and her two dogs, Marvel and DC.
