

Sarah Price, MSN-Ed, BSN, RN
Director, Public Health Integration and Innovation
The National Association of Community Health Centers (NACHC)

As Director, Public Health Integration and Innovation at The National Association of Community Health Centers (NACHC), Sarah Price's day-to-day roles include providing technical assistance for the integration of public health initiatives, including adult immunizations, pediatric weight management, and other emerging topics. Sarah's role also includes working with Primary Care Associations and Health Center Controlled Networks on quality improvement, assisting health centers to measure and improve performance in clinical, service, and cost aspects of health center operations. Alongside her role at NACHC, Sarah is an Adjunct Faculty for Public Health Nursing at Georgetown School of Nursing where she guides undergraduate and graduate nursing students through their public health nursing rotations. Previously, Sarah was a Nurse Care Manager/Director of Nursing for 12 years at Unity Health Care, Inc, a large health center in Washington, DC. With over 20 years of nursing experience focused on community and public health, Sarah is specialized in developing, piloting, implementing, and evaluating strategies related to interdisciplinary care services and innovative primary care workflows. Sarah earned a Master of Science in Nursing-Education from George Mason University and a Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Emory University School of Nursing.
